

Do Not Sell My Personal Information

Under the California Consumer Privacy Act of 2018 (“CCPA”), California residents have the right to opt out of the “sale” of the personal information (i.e., disclosures to other businesses or third parties for monetary or other valuable consideration) that we collect about them as described in our Privacy Policy.

We use device identifiers (like cookies, beacons, Ad IDs, and IP addresses) and we may provide this data to other companies in order to improve our websites and apps. We may also use it to show our ads when you visit other companies’ sites and apps, or to allow other companies to show their ads on our sites and apps. This sharing of data may be defined as a sale under the California Consumer Privacy Act.

These device identifiers aren't what you might traditionally think of as personal information, like your name or phone number, and they don't directly identify you. However, if you don’t want us to “sell” this information, you can choose the “Do not sell” setting below and fill out the form.
